According to the news, many companies nowadays are facing with the same issue: they couldn't find young employees that satisfies the job requirements. Doing an unpaid work for a period would both stun the overall production rate of the nation and make young adults panic for their future.

The overall GDP of a place is linked to the employment rate. If some of the young adults were forced to do unpaid work helping the community, many jobs that favors young people will miss the opportunity. For instance, it is better for a gym to hire a strong and young adult that has extended stamina and developed muscles as its coach. By requiring young people to do unpaid work, companies that seek for young adults won't be able to have the same value as before.

Many reliable articles have pointed out that during the era of new technologies, lots of people are worried about their future being replaced by machines. There are many companies lay off employees in favor of new tools, such as AI chatbots. AI chatbots don't have to rest, and there are some huge databases in the background of it to provide knowledge. Humans, including young adults, must come up with innovative ideas to live with AI, and that often takes time. By forcing young adults to do some community stuff, the ratio of panic adults grows, and they won't have that much time to think about collaborating with AI tools.

Overall, it's best to not requiring young adults to help the community for a period, as it does more harm than good. Young adults benefit the GDP and require paid job in their golden time. If there exists fewer young adults for jobs, the some of the categories of the job might collapse and it might hinders the overall production value of the nation. Governments should reconsider reallocate the community jobs to the older adults that loss their job.

Overall Feedback

Introduction Paragraph:

- The introduction touches on the main topic but lacks a clear thesis statement. It needs a stronger opening to effectively set the context and purpose of the essay.
- Suggestion: Start with a hook to engage the reader and clearly state the thesis, outlining the main arguments of the essay, following the format provided in the handout.

Body Paragraphs:

- The body paragraphs present some arguments but lack depth and clarity in their development. The points made are somewhat repetitive and need better organization and support.
- Suggestion: Use clear topic sentences for each paragraph and develop each point with specific examples and explanations. Ensure each paragraph focuses on a unique aspect of the argument.

Concluding Paragraph:

- The conclusion summarizes the main points but does not effectively restate the thesis or offer a strong final thought. It introduces new ideas, which is not recommended.
- Suggestion: Follow the conclusion structure outlined in the handout – restate the main idea, make a prediction or recommendation, and avoid introducing new arguments.
